Could have done some more on the elements but need to keep the amount of work about equal for all sessions of this experiment.

It appears to be a bathhouse, there are wetroom tiles on the floor and wall, also similar but different shape tiles that go around as a low raised wall or edge. On top of that rounded raised edge is a strange element which is like a large brown or brass colored dome but when inspected it feels like rubbery soft oil and it has a floral fragrance, inside of it there are herbal leaves and flowers which seem to be there for fragrance or cosmetic qualities. There is a dark solid wall behind to the left of this structure. To the right is a red element which is billowy and behaves like a canvas or a fabric, it has got yellow threads going across it as part of the material, it too had dark floor tiles under it. Water pours down on the brown or brass colored dome, so the dome is wet on the surface, there is also water on the floor tiles. Behind the brown dome I found one or a few fragrant perfume or soap red roses. There is a brown dish but this one is elevated above the floor level and is not on the floor, it is higher up. I saw a flash image of wall tiles with that face on it, reminding me of some decoration in a Roman bathhouse that kind of style. One time I saw that bent pipe in a green color and with sharp pieces which remind more of the stem of a flower.

Target: Illustration. A very difficult target but the correlation I produced is very good. Now I understand why I seemed to have again more of an artificial space. Has this pattern on the target image been used to decorate in a bath?
