There is a strange organic orange structure, it consists of two parts. One part is like an open bag with an asymmetrical contour, it is up at some elevation and floats round like a bag in the air and changes shape slowly. To it is connected the second part which is also of an orange color and is a longer appendage with a wavy and uneven pattern and shape. There is also a yellow starfish shape, which has got green plantlife substance in between two of its five yellow arms. There is a row of yellow lamps or such that are along a gray wall, these same yellow elements in a row were also seen behind the orange lumpy shape element. A gray cistern shape with a long vertical pole extending up above it was also seen. This target mostly reminds me of floating balloon decorations, or of organic sealife such as anemones and starfish, or possibly this being flowers such as a tulip. We are up at some elevation, and the textures encountered are not hard, smooth, even or solid, but wavy slowly moving waving organic shapes.

Target is a black and white portrait of a man. I can actually give this session a good grade of correlation, considering into account the difficulty of getting any useful elements or impressions from such a target image at all. The rounder orange element is like the head with hair border and the white collar on the portrait is like my wavy orange shape, there is also a gray wall behind on the right. There is some correlation, even though this is not an ideal image for an RV target.
